Why inform your partner?

Informing a partner may not be easy, but it is important that you do so. If left untreated, some STDs can cause serious and permanent damage to the body. Many STDs don't have any symptoms, so the only way to know is to get tested. Informing your partner(s) gives them the opportunity to get immediate screening and treatment.

Partner Services Will:

- Ensure your privacy, identity, and personal information are protected
- Provide you with support, answer your questions and offer you options to confidentially inform your partner(s)
- Link your partner to testing, medical care and other available resources

How can we help?

We will work with you so that your partner(s) can be informed in a sensitive and private way. There are a number of ways for this to happen.

We can do it for you.

A staff member can take information from you about your partner(s). We will then discreetly get in touch with your partner(s), let them know of their possible exposure—without saying anything about you—and refer them to testing and other services they may need. Again, we will never, under any circumstances, disclose any information about you.

We can help you do it.

A staff member can help prepare you to inform your partner(s) of their possible exposure. We will also offer support and information, including referrals for testing and other services that your partner(s) may need.

We can do it with you.

You can choose to talk with your partner(s) along with a staff member who will provide support and answer any questions and concerns your partner(s) may have.

You can combine these options.

A staff member will work with you to inform your partner(s) in any combination of these ways.
